“ Meeting Kathryn was something I personally believe anyone would of felt blessed about, she could make you feel accepted within moments of meeting you. Kathryn was anything but ordinary, she made me laugh in ways I haven't in such a long time she may not of understood a lot but she was also never clueless. I have found something id like to share with everyone. A poem of some things that she personally had said over the coarse of time I've known her and even more so while my mom knew her. Kathryn always would tell us " I'm Here " and we would tell her "just checking" and she would smile and say " I'm not going anywhere" so thinking hard and long for the write words to say, I remembered a poem I once read and id like to share it today with every one.

~ I am here ~

I am here I hate it when you cry, But you don't understand. I am sitting right beside you, I am there I hold your hand, I would never leave you, surely inside you know that i will wait forever, For I love you so, I am here. I am here when you wake, I am here when you sleep though you do not feel it, I hold you tight. Sometimes you look so lost, staring into space, wondering where I am, Am i in a happy place? Yes I am happy. I want you to know that's true. I am happy because i still spend my days with you, I know you can't see or hear me but you don't realize, I am never to far away. I guide you through your days with words the soul does hear. I hug you when you cry, I wipe away the tears. When you lay your head down I whisper " sleep tight my darling". When you feel a chill just know i am near, when you see a shadow do not scare I am near. I leave you little signs, to know its me here. so no more tears my angel, live life and I will be beside you, be strong, be brave, for I never left, for I am here.

“ My Kat I am so missing you and love every minute and everyday I spent with you and I am thankful to have been your nurse for 5 years and I am thankful for all the fun videos and pictures we got to do. You were a strong and compassionate lady and you were 98 strong and know I will always think of you and cherish every second we had every birthday ,Easter Christmas and so on . Love you Mary your nurse.
