“ My first day of working for John coincided with a personal crisis that had me struggling to concentrate on the several million dollar real estate settlement John had that day. I will never forget John's compassion and kindness. He pulled me aside and told me that it was more important that I take time off to deal with whatever it was, and that the work would get done without me. He offered to listen, but didn't press for details.

John also went to bat for his employees, many a time, often in a very personal way. He used his power sparingly, but wisely. Most of all, I remember the twinkle in his eye, his sense of humor, and the way he made us feel that we could achieve whatever we set out to do.

There is a big hole in the universe where John used to be. I pray for comfort and solace for all of his family, including those who worked with him, at this time.
