I am so very sorry to hear of the passing of Marlene. I knew her through Nina her daughter. She was so precious of heart and so kind. Always had a smile for me when our paths crossed at the Y. May Jesus hold all her family extra tight through their grieving. Hugs. Cheryl Cappellini

“Marlene Jordan, a Renaissance lady indeed: she was an intellect, a friend to all, a humorist, an insightful thinker, and a wise guide.

She sat in the middle of my sophomore English class at HACC Lancaster. And, as those 14 weeks moved forward, Marlene created a lot of the dynamics of that class.

Yes, she was older than the 20 somethings who surrounded her. She slowly and imperceptibly managed to inspire these young people to think and make good use of their learning experience.

She asked penetrating questions about the readings we studied, and she had a skill to help keep the lessons focused.

Soon, Marlene showed her wit and humor which often made the class fun. She realized that I could be teased if I could return the favor.

For one thing, Marlene was an impeccable dresser, and I loved to dress for each class. She began to insist on where I got something I was wearing. And, she'd tell the class if she approved. The girls laugh and listened; the guys screwed up their faces in a duh sort of way.

It became a joke that class would begin that way, and I was prepared for a minute or two to offer a story behind my pleasure in fashion.

Near the end of the semester Marlene and a few of the gals told me they were picking what I would wear for the last class.

She had made much of a red suit I wore early in the semester, and when she learned that my husband had bought it for me, by himself, she told a delightful moral lesson to the fellows in the class.

Yes, they chose the red suit!

I hope I convey, in some small way, the amazing talents of Marlene. She was fun; she was kind, and she was ceaseless in her sharing.

“ I was so sad to read this in the paper this morning. Marlene was my friend at Edward Hand Junior High School and remained my friend at McCaskey. I would even occasionally see her at Armstrong. She always lightened my spirits with her humor and her will to succeed. My thoughts and prayers are with you all!
