“ Paul and his wife were our golfing friends at Four Seasons for many years. Paul was always asking for advice - how do you hold your club, how to place your feet - always trying to improve his game. We remember Paul's cheerfulness and pleasant demeanor. He told some good stories. One was about the time at Myrtle Beach when he and his wife played the Waterway course. To get to the course you had to go on a tram across the coastal waterway. Upon returning from their round of golf, the electricity went off due to a storm. They were stuck over the waterway for a long time sitting on the tram, golf course in back, parking lot in front, a storm above, the waterway below. Paul was the best dressed man on the golf course, very neat and precise. He talked often about his children, one of whom I had the privilege to teach at Elizabethtown College. He was proud to tell us that his children had given him the trip to Myrtle Beach. Our condolences go out to his family, especially to Arlene. We miss his smiling face on the course.
